My Neighbors

"Dear, you remember your old high school flame—"

Summer is the active season for snakes in Michigan and here are the ones you're most apt to see. If you shudder at the thought of meeting up with snakes, it may ease your mind to know that Michigan has only one poisonous species—the Massasauga or swamp rattlesnake. And even this rattler, confined to the lower peninsula and Bois Blanc Island, is too small to inflict a fatal wound except, perhaps, to a small child. There is no authentic record of a person dying in this state from a bite of a native snake. Superstitions and myths have generated many false fears about snakes and clouded the generally beneficial role these reptiles play in the "balance of nature."

LANSING. — Few, if any, living things in Michigan's outdoors are disliked and feared by more people than snakes. Hence, many people feel that the "only good snake is a dead snake."

This is not true, of course. It would be purely speculative to weigh the import of the serpent's foot in the Garden of Eden in this type of thinking. Of more impact in advancing such anti-snake sentiment are the superstitions, myths and general misunderstanding which have since blossomed.

There are countless fallacies about snakes, many of which shroud them with a reputation of being evil, deadly or, at best, undesirable.

One fable has it that the hog-nose snake (puff adder) blows a deadly or at least violent, poison. Although it does hiss and puff when excited, this is merely a bluff. Any misguided idea that the puff adder blows a poisonous vapor probably stems from some people becoming sick from nervousness and fright after coming across one.

Equally erroneous is the widespread myth that the milk snake suckles cows in pasture. This has made the snake somewhat of a scapegoat for cows when they fail to deliver their quota of milk. It is also widely believed, but completely untrue, that snakes are "slimy" or "that they sting" with their tongues. On and on, the wheel of fiction grinds out so-called "facts" about snakes.

Such fallacies have clouded the generally beneficial role snakes play in the "balance of nature." Many snakes, including the poisonous Massasauga or swamp rattlesnake, eat large numbers of rats and mice which destroy grain and plunder the farmer's chicken house. Many feed on insects which attack gardens and pests humans.

The deadliness of a few poisonous species has done nothing to enhance the lovely status of snakes and, in effect, has branded most snakes with the "skull and crossed-bones" seal.

If you shudder at the thought of meeting up with a snake, it may ease your mind to know that Michigan has only one poisonous species—the Massasauga or rattlesnake. And even this one, confined to the Lower Peninsula and Bois Blanc Island, is only mildly poisonous. There is no authentic record of a person dying in Michigan from a bite of a native snake. The Massasauga can produce some uncomfortable after-effects to those it bites if first aid is not properly and promptly applied. Whiskey is no cure for snake bites as some people believe!

The rattler is identified by its namesake but, contrary to another false belief, its age cannot be told by counting its rattles. When aroused, this snake vibrates its rattles which produce a "buzzing" or "hissing" sound. The Massasauga has a thick body blotched with black or brown markings on a lighter background. It is a denizen of marshy areas and wet meadows but may range far upland in summer.

All of Michigan's other snakes are harmless. Garter snakes are the most familiar, being found almost everywhere from wooded lands above the Straits to farms and suburban areas of the Lower Peninsula. They prefer moist places near swamps, lakes and streams, but are also present on uplands. Their diet includes frogs, toads, fish, insects and earthworms. All garter snakes have a similar color pattern: three narrow, yellow stripes on a brown or greenish background.

Water snakes are also common in many parts of the state, along edges of ponds and streams. They are distinguished by their large brownish, heavy bodies.

Considerably smaller in size are Michigan's ground snakes which spend most of their daylight hours under logs, stones, and other such hideouts. All of these except the ring-neck resemble small garter snakes. They are smooth-bodied with lustrous dark scales and a yellow or orange neck ring.

The slender little green snake, with its rich grass-green hue, is one of the state's most attractively colored snakes. Also known as the grass snake, it ranges throughout the state but is most common in northern Michigan. It is the only Michigan snake that feeds almost entirely on insects.

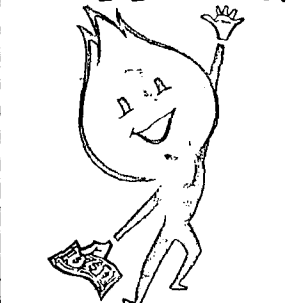

As its name implies, the blue racer is Michigan's reptilian speed merchant. Most commonly found in southern Michigan, the blue racer has undoubtedly terrified more people than any other snake in this state because of its lightning-like movements, size, and generally menacing appearance. Although it strikes viciously when cornered, this big, grayish-blue snake is harmless. Its prey consists of mice and other small rodents, small birds, other snakes, frogs and sometimes insects.

As mentioned before, the milk snake has been misnamed and wrongly blamed for things it doesn't do. Actually, it is one of the state's most helpful snakes in ridding the outdoors of harmful rodents. Brilliant olive markings dot its smooth, glossy body. Presently, in the Lower Peninsula, the milk snake seldom ventures forth during the day.

pilot blacksnake and the fox snake. The blacksnake is the state's largest serpent, often reaching five feet or more in length. It is found mainly in the southwest corner of the Lower Peninsula and seems to be most abundant in the Allegan state forest. The fox or pine snake frequently vibrates its tail rapidly when excited like a rattlesnake. Its brown markings on a yellow background help to distinguish this snake from a rattler. Its range includes the western end of the Upper Peninsula and a relatively narrow strip along the southeastern sector of the Lower Peninsula.

Very Little Time . . .

It has been observed that, during his campaign, resident Kennedy was critical of personal diplomacy that is, diplomacy conducted at the highest levels, by chiefs of state, rather than by lesser officials. And the anger that is inherent in personal diplomacy are evident enough — a decision made, a sentence spoken, the head of a government becomes a matter of international moment instantly, and it is exceedingly difficult to take back. On the other hand, the acts of juniors in, if need be, be disavowed.

Yet Mr. Kennedy has been conducting personal diplomacy on an intensive scale with his counterparts in all a dozen countries. And this apparent reversal of policy, some of the leading commentators have been saying, is the result of a knowledge Mr. Kennedy has gained since assuming office — the knowledge that in is incredibly swift-moving age personal diplomacy inevitable and unavoidable, whatever its disadvantages may be.

In any event, U. S. policy vis-a-vis the Soviet Union has been clarified. No transcript of what Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Khrushchev had to say to each other in Vienna has been published, and the authorized summaries have been of an extremely general nature. But it is clear that Mr. Kennedy is following what might be called a "hard" line — a line in which he says, in effect, we go no farther, whatever the risks, and we will stand on what we conceive to be the fundamental and unchangeable interests of the United States and the Western alliance.

This, no doubt, has earned Mr. Khrushchev's respect — the Russians understand and respect toughness, even as they are the first to make the most of any show of weakness. Beyond that, it has served to sharpen the differences between the two great nuclear powers and, perhaps, to bring very near the moment of ultimate show-down.

We have problems aplenty, as all know. Spin a globe of the world and their sites will come before your eyes after another — Cuba, much of the rest of Latin America, Vietnam, Laos, the whole Middle East, Africa with all its new, restless and unpredictable nations and so on and on. But the probability is that the most dangerous and critical area of the lot is that old one — Berlin. A truly unified Berlin is virtually beyond conception. But the Soviets and their satellites are determined that West Berlin, as a free city with free government, must cease to exist, and must be brought into the totalitarian octopus that East Berlin represents in all its harsh grimness. The show-down may come soon — perhaps by fall, perhaps sooner. Then the danger of a shooting war will become agonizingly acute. It is a risk that Mr. Kennedy appears ready to accept, as a matter of sheer necessity, and all the indications are that the American people, and the leaders of both the parties, support him solidly in this resolve. In essence, he says to the Soviet empire: "We have gone this far, and that is all. We will go no farther, no matter what the dangers may be."

This hard policy explains why Mr. Kennedy has been working so determinedly to shore up the Western alliance, and to resolve the differences between the participating powers. Mr. Macmillan goes along — it is certainly no secret that, today, an England without the United States for an ally and a shield would be almost totally defenseless. Yet, within the United Kingdom, and even within Mr. Macmillan's conservative party, there are dissidents. Some go so far as to say submission to the Soviets would be preferable to conflict, and to the death and ruin that would come with it. This is a continuing problem, and its gravity should not be underestimated.

The question mark is President De Gaulle of France. It is generally agreed that he is a very great man. His faith in France's ultimate resurgence never faltered, even in the darkest days of the Vichy government, when he was condemned to death in absentia. But, like most great men, De Gaulle is extraordinarily difficult. He has a vision that never fails him — a vision of France as she used to be, the first among nations, the leader of all. It is profound pride that leads him to refuse American leadership, to attempt to make France a nuclear power in her own right and, even, to threaten to abandon NATO. This last possibility must trouble Mr. Kennedy most of all. For a NATO without France would, for geographical reasons if none other, be a weak reed indeed. The collapse of the system, as a force to be reckoned with, a force to make the Soviets think twice before risking violence in Europe, would be likely. According to the best reports, the Paris meeting of Mr. Kennedy and Mr. De Gaulle was cordial, productive, and of some value. But there is nothing to show that the French President's fundamental and romantic view has changed in the slightest.

Time will tell. And something the President has said has to do with that truism: "There is very little time. The enemy is lean and hungry and the United States is the only strong sentinel at the gate."

Interesting Events In Grayling 23 Years Ago

INTERESTING ITEMS OF NEWS GATHERED FROM THE FILES OF THE AVALANCHE OF 23 YEARS AGO

July 14, 1938

While the rest of Michigan sweltered, troops of the Michigan National Guard swung into their fourth day for field training with what they report as the finest weather in years. Three or four blankets per man were not too many last night. The annual National Guard review will be held next Saturday, at 1 o'clock. At that time Governor Frank Murphy is expected to be in attendance. This event is a state-wide attraction and thousands come here annually to witness this fine military spectacle.

Destruction and damages done at Grayling's new sewage disposal plant by, presumably, young boys, was brought up at the special council meeting Tuesday night. Rifle shots have damaged not only window glass but some of the inside apparatus, some of which was expensive to replace. Besides such damage, the breaking of glass containers filled with deadly gas made it extremely hazardous for people to enter certain compartments where gas has been able to escape because of this breakage, which was liable to cause quick death.

With the taking effect of Grayling's new traffic ordinance and the posting of parking signs, considerable discussion was raised. Certain closed areas caused hardships with some places. There was also some objection to the employment of a traffic officer. The ordinance is so drafted that it is flexible in that it permits of regulation by means of "parking signs." It has been determined that all parking on US-27 should be parallel with the street. Michigan Avenue in the business district was determined that parking should be diagonal. In addition there are signs where no parking is allowed, that is especially in front of fire plugs, street corners, alleys, garages, etc. Request was made for the continuing operation of the caution light on the US-27 and Michigan Avenue intersection, and a motion was carried to keep it lit at hours of the day and night until after Labor Day. There were some suggestions that tourists, seeing the parking regulations, refused to stop in Grayling. It does seem that tourists would welcome the safety that is assured by well provided traffic regulations. For Grayling to maintain a traffic officer seemed to shock some people, they feeling that Grayling was trying big-city stuff. With the new regulations going into effect it is quite necessary that there is someone on hand to explain them and to see that they are enforced. Kenneth Hoelsi is courteous and friendly and is doing a good job. A slight contention between Hoelsi and some of the National Guard truck drivers was quickly straightened out when City Manager Granger and City Attorney Charles Moore took up the matter with Provost Marshall Major Oscar Osterander. He was fully in accord with the local regulations and since has provided military patrol to assist in the regulation of Michigan National Guard motorists.

BREAKING IN YOUR NEW CAR

If you have just bought a new car, or are about to buy one, then pay strict attention to the first thousand miles you drive it.
They are by far the most important in the entire life of the car.
Tests by automotive engineers show that more wear occurs in the first thousand miles than in the next twenty to thirty thousand
- and the better the quality of the engine the more this is the case.
Electronic measurements finer than one ten thousandths of an inch mean new parts fit together tightly - and heat up quickly - during the break-in period. If they become too hot, excessive and irregular wear
from heat expansion can ruin an engine, or shorten its life by many thousands of miles.
High spots and other irregularities on metal surfaces will show up to delicate surfaces will show up on even the most carefully manufactured part. These parts must be worn together and at first especially the first two hundred miles, so that they "fit" together in their own microscopic grooves. If they become too hot they will expand to the point of no tolerance and gouge one another.
Avoid anything more than an hour steady running at low speeds during the first two hundred miles to allow for cool-off. Change break-in oil to regular oil in the crankcase at 200 miles and change the lubricant
in the transmission and rear axle. Then gradually increase your speed watching for signs of heat.
If you buy your new car
from us, you can, of course, be assured of a thorough "pre-delivery" check as well as competent break-in service.

Checkup Against Cancer

MY fight with cancer two years ago taught me many things. Among the things it taught me was that people really want to know what they can do to protect themselves against death from cancer. This is the keynote in the thousands of letters I received after my lung cancer operation.

So in a few brief messages to the public, I want to report some of the things I have learned. The first thing you can do is to have an annual health checkup by your physician. This is the best protection against death from cancer. Many cancers can be cured if the doctor has an opportunity to find the disease early. Early cancer is most curable. But the sad fact is that too many people do not give themselves a chance — they seek help too late.

When you go to your doctor for a checkup, don't go with fear, but with confidence. You will learn that doctors will talk to you with frankness. You should do the same with them. Answer all their questions completely and with honesty. The great odds are that the doctor will say "you are OK." But the odds also are that if he finds early cancer, your chances of being saved are great.

Michigan Bear Hunters Improved Their Take During Year Of 1960

DANIEL BOONE HAD nothing on Michigan hunters when it comes to bringing home the bear meat.

Boone, a Tennessee frontiersman of a moon shill with the muzzleloader, may rank as the most famous bear hunter of all time, but hunters in the Water Wonderland have improved their take over the years.

Blow and arrow and firearm bear hunters killed 1,238 of the ferocious furry animals during 1960, the Conservation Department reports.

It was in the Upper Peninsula where bear hunters found their greatest success, and an improvement during the firearm season, which is concurrent with the deer hunting season, was the reason.

Some 800 bears were taken from above the Straits of Mackinac compared with only 270 in 1959, the department said.

Another 297 bears were counted crossing the Mackinac Bridge on their way to the food locker or the taxidermist shop during the early fall bear season last year.

While hunters who use dogs to go after bear are often criticized by other sportsmen, the department said figures over the years have shown only a small percentage of bears are taken with the aid of dogs.

The department said 543 hunters reported using dogs last year, only 74 per cent of them were successful, bagging 40 bears.

Skill with weapons, rivaling old Daniel Boone, was the chief reason for the increase in bear kill last year, said the department.

A Primary Election, the Republican candidates for the State Constitutional Convention will be held in Grayling next Tuesday, the 2nd of the month. The two parties, however, have to be determined at the 29th Senatorial District Primary. The Representative will be elected by the voters of the 29th District. The voters will receive a ballot which is printed on both sides. Only one side carries the name of the candidates for both districts. The other side lists the names of the candidates. If a voter votes on both sides of the ticket, the Republican candidates will be elected.

Form Local Little League Committee

A meeting was held in the Grayling Legion Hall with Grayling and Cravay as the topic of discussion. At this time "the Little League Baseball" was formed by Jack Wilson, Charlie Jim Kilchen.

The "Little League" was organized for the purpose of providing a set of rules and regulations that must be adhered to in order to enter into and conduct a game.

The age groups that are to participate in this are 8 years through 12 years. The first meeting was made with a "Grayling High" and in these approximately 100 to 150 would be eligible to play. Because of the large work, money and time have to be invested in this, it would be to feel out the public and to see if there is a demand for this project.

On Wednesday, July 10, at the meeting room in the Grayling Legion Hall, it was held for all persons who are interested in helping to organize a team.

Baseball is our time and has always been very popular in Grayling.

We are trying to get a team from Grayling affiliated with the organization and is ready to help in setting up.

So let's see a big turnout at this meeting, as it is fit-to-the-whole town.

Jim Kilchen.

NOTICE

The Women of the 227 will hold an in-house meeting on Tuesday evening, July 10, at the hall.

All members please present.
